

We hope this announcement finds you and your families and coworkers in good health. To those of you who have reached out to us over the last few months or those wondering about the status of Biospherical Instruments (“BSI”), we are happy to announce that we are weathering the COVID-19 storm, and no longer plan to close or suspend business indefinitely. We really appreciate your patience and understanding during these difficult times.

Our communities and the world have gone through a lot during the last few months and are facing an unprecedented situation. In large part due to the help of government support, including the Paycheck Protection Program, we have been able to retain our experienced, skilled staff and implement a plan to continue to provide the research community with our instruments and services.

Over the last couple of months, we have implemented safety precautions to help protect BSI’s employees, including making use of remote working and employee scheduling to minimize building occupancy. While we once regretted that we rarely had walk-in visitors, we now realize that this has helped us to develop an appropriate business plan going forward and to reopen.

Thank you for your ongoing support and understanding. We value your business and look forward to continuing to work with you. Please contact BSI if you have any questions.
